

Corporate Membership

Chatham House has been home to the Royal Institute of International Affairs for ninety years. Our mission is to be a world-leading source of independent analysis, informed debate and influential ideas on how to build a prosperous and secure world for all.

About Chatham House

Chatham House aims to shape policy in international affairs through rigorous analysis and research covering four main areas:

- Regional Studies and International Law
- Energy, Environment and Resources
- International Economics
- International Security

'Royal Dutch Shell is one of the longest-standing members of Chatham House. The quality of the research and analysis provided, the richness of the presentations and debates, and the access to leading figures from the world of politics, NGOs and academia are second to none. Our relationship with Chatham House, in short, is of significant value to our business.'

PETER VOSER
Chief Executive Officer
Royal Dutch Shell Plc

Corporate Members of Chatham House receive a wide range of benefits, varying according to their level of engagement. These include access to our Members Events programme, exclusive invitations to Corporate Events and subscriptions to our publications. Membership can also enhance your organization's profile as an active player in the international community.

Profile

Corporate Members are listed publicly on our website, members' boards, and in our Annual Review. Other profile-building opportunities include conference sponsorship, discounted advertising in our magazine The World Today and speaker opportunities at our Corporate Leaders Series.

Insight

All organizations are affected by global challenges such as the world's changing economy, threats to food and energy security, climate change and cyber crime. Chatham House provides a unique forum for the debate and analysis of these topics and for the development and dissemination of policy responses.

Access

Our extensive events programme provides members with an independent forum which allows them to interact in an open and impartial environment with business leaders, academics, diplomats, the media, non-governmental organizations, policy-makers and researchers.

Recent speakers have included:

HE Abdalla El-Badri,
Secretary General, OPEC

HE Abdullah Gül, President of the Republic of Turkey

Sir Michael Rake, Chairman,
BT Group plc

Jim O'Neill, Chairman,
Goldman Sachs Asset
Management

'As an international business advising clients all over the world, it is vital that we understand the wider social, political and economic context in which we are operating. Membership of Chatham House helps us to do that. Their ability to attract some of the leading figures from business, politics, NGOs and academia means that the discussion is always of a high quality and always at the cutting edge of the debate.'

Partnership

Partnership includes all the benefits of Major Corporate Membership but also allows organizations to engage actively and selectively with our research programmes, as well as with a variety of decision-makers.

In exchange for their ongoing substantial financial support Partners can enjoy tailored interaction with specific research projects or programmes. This may include briefings, workshops, roundtable debates and early access to research findings. Partners may also share their resources with Chatham House and work with the institute on conferences and specific events.

Academic and NGO Membership

Chatham House also offers membership packages specifically tailored towards Academic Institutions and Non-Governmental Organizations.
