The Africa Programme develops policy orientated research on issues affecting individual states of Africa, their international relations and the continent as a whole. A reputation for independence and influence enables Africa Programme research to impact on policy, in support of building a sustainably secure, prosperous and just world. Since its establishment in 2002, the Africa Programme has become a world-leading centre for independent policy research and debate on Africa’s politics and socio-economic change. By working with the best international experts, the programme is a hub for thought leadership on Africa, producing reliable analysis and disseminating findings globally through its convening power and extensive networks.

Research
Policy-making in and towards Africa often suffers owing to a lack of accurate and up-to-date information, a lack of coordination and incoherent political focus. The Africa Programme mitigates these by identifying and delivering research that is:

• Politically focused, whilst accommodating economic, security and developmental approaches;
• Policy-based, seeking to affect decision-making and outcomes;
• Region- and country-led with a cautious approach to continental themes;
• Based on original analysis and an avoidance of repackaged information;
• Forward-thinking and differentiated from current research elsewhere;
• Focused on drawing together decision-makers from across countries and sectors for improved engagements.

Current research areas include:

• Elections and Political Systems;
• Foreign Relations and Africa’s Agency in the International System;
• Inclusive Economic Growth, Governance and Technology;
• Peace and Security;
• Sustainable Resource Governance.
Events and dissemination
Our events provide the opportunity to engage with world-renowned experts on issues pertinent to African states’ national, regional and international politics. The unique convening power and independent reputation of Chatham House mean that Africa Programme publications are widely read, respected and made freely available and distributed to over 30,000 decision-makers and influencers globally. The Africa Programme promotes consensus and outcome-orientated debate. By supporting informed reporting by international news agencies, the Africa Programme improves the quality of information disseminated globally.

A global network of support
The Africa Programme works closely with research partners in Africa and around the world to promote policy analysis with a global perspective.

Africa Programme partners include:
• African Studies Association of India (New Delhi);
• European Union Institute for Security Studies (Paris);
• Friedrich-Ebert-Stiftung (Bonn);
• Institut Français des Relations Internationales (Paris);
• Institute of International Relations (Prague);
