

Africa Programme

What we do

Research

The Chatham House Africa Programme is a world-leading centre for independent policy-oriented research on African politics and socio-economic change. A sustained record of non-partisan and balanced engagement enables Africa Programme research to influence policy in support of building sustainably secure, prosperous and just societies.

Convening

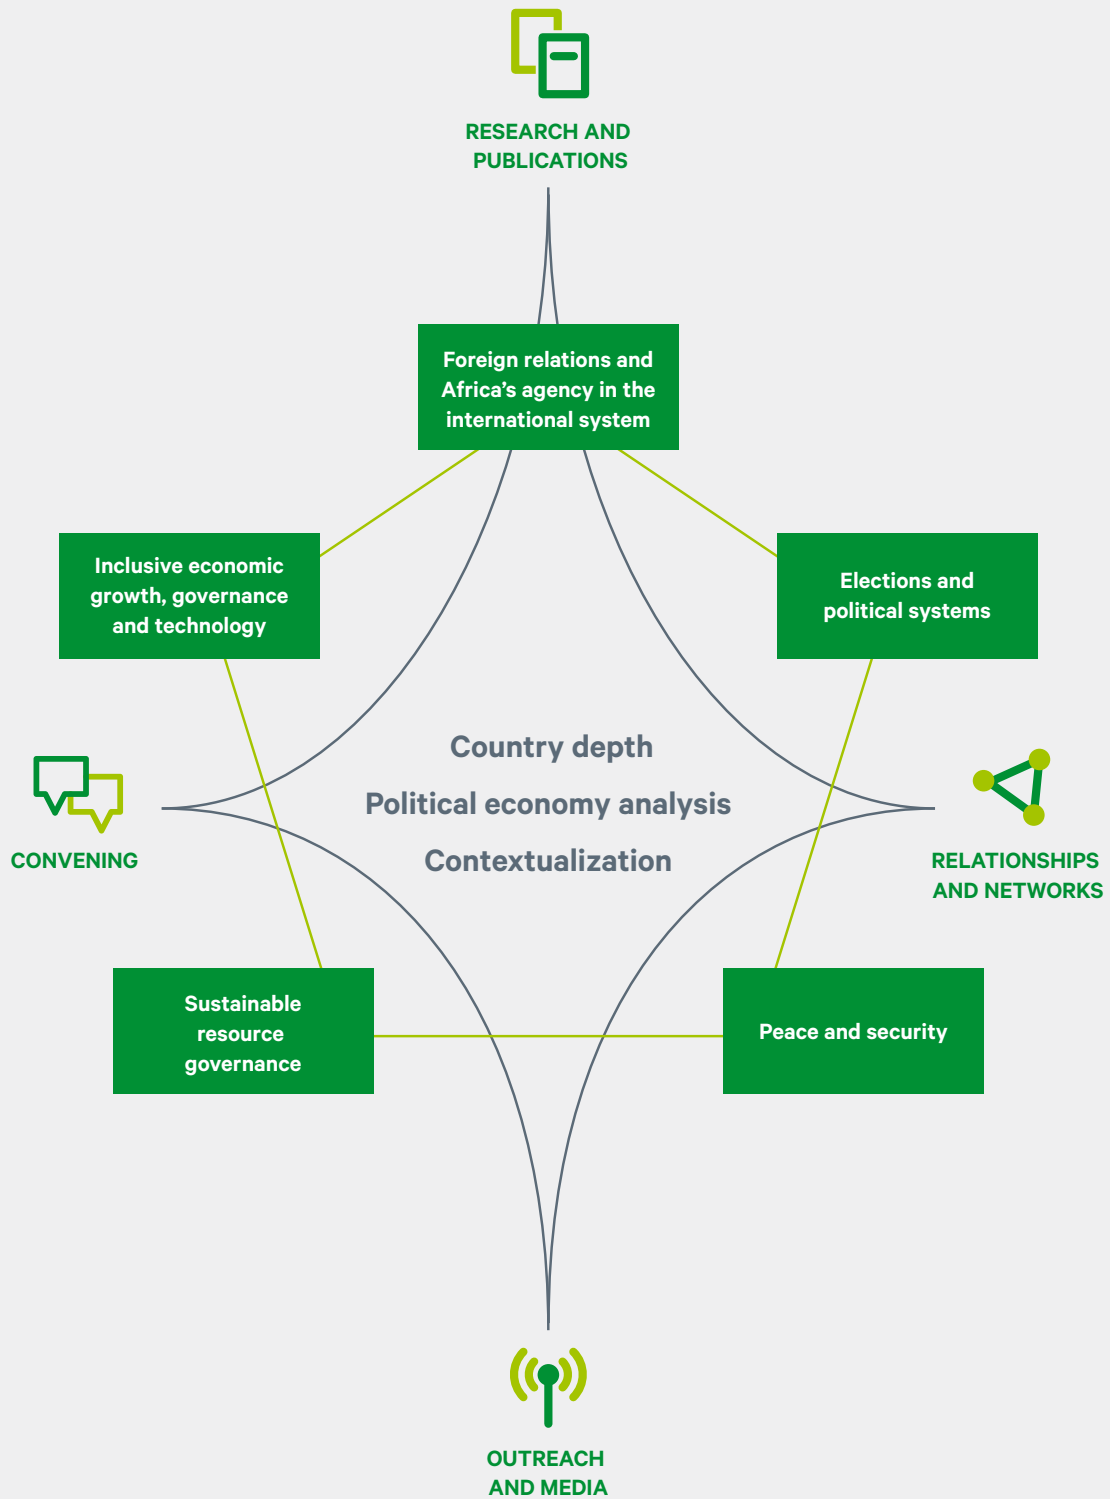

Africa Programme events provide opportunities to bring together recognised and new experts and stakeholders to explore critical issues in the politics and international relations of African states. The programme leverages its convening power to promote consensus and outcome-oriented debates, connecting diverse perspectives and engaged audiences.

Outreach

Research publications are widely read, freely available and distributed to over 30,000 decision-makers and influencers globally. The production of diverse outputs enables the programme to engage audiences across conventional and new multimedia platforms. Regular contributions to regional and international media outlets promote informed reporting, improving the quality of information disseminated globally.

How we work

Research pillars

Foreign relations and Africa's agency in the international system

A series of Africa Programme research projects, publications and events explore how Africa's expanding partnerships are reshaping traditional alliances and positioning the continent as a major player in global diplomacy. As part of this research focus, programme work seeks to improve understanding of individual countries' political and economic diplomacy and strategic autonomy; evolving relations with traditional partners such as the EU and the UK; emerging or deepening relations with countries in the Asia-Pacific region and the Gulf states; and re-engagement with Central and Eastern Europe (CEE) and Russia.

Inclusive economic growth, governance and technology

This research focus examines some of the key challenges in inclusive development and demographic change, including projects on sustainable financing and green jobs and the development of carbon markets. A multi-year project on Social Norms and Accountable Governance (SNAG) seeks context-specific solutions to address collective problems such as corruption through an evidence-based understanding of the drivers that sustain these problems.

Elections and political systems

The Africa Programme has a long track record of producing outputs and analysis on developments during and between election cycles, including through structured debates with presidential contenders, civil society, and technocratic figures ahead of elections. Programme staff have participated in electoral observation initiatives in Mozambique, Liberia, and Ghana in addition to pre-election assessments in Malawi, Botswana and South Africa. Research has also focused on tensions between authoritarian opportunism and democratic resilience, as well as on diverse governance models across the continent.

80+
research outputs

The Africa Programme produced 80+ research outputs, including peer reviewed papers, book chapters, academic journal articles, expert comments, op-eds and multimedia outputs in the past year.

50
events

Over 50 events were hosted by the Africa Programme this year, including virtual and in-person roundtables, panel events, and international conferences.

50+
policy briefings

The Programme has conducted over 50 policy briefings in the past year, engaging senior representatives from government, the private sector, civil society and multilateral institutions.

2,000+
citations

Africa Programme staff were cited over 2,000 times in the global media over the course of the past year.

30,000+
dissemination

Research outputs are widely read, freely available and distributed to over 30,000 decision-makers and influencers globally.

20+
countries visited

Africa Programme representatives visited over 20 countries in the past year, including for events and conferences in Algeria, Ethiopia, Mozambique and Nigeria.

Sustainable resource governance

Africa Programme research focuses on diversifying agriculture and commodity-dependent economies for greater environmental and economic sustainability, as well as revenue management, human rights standards and transparency in the extractive sector. Seminal publications include Nigeria's Criminal Crude, which examined evidence on the scale and method of the trade in stolen crude oil and international options to stem the crime; Oil in Uganda, which explored lessons for success in developing and managing oil; and Thirst for African Oil, charting the impact of Asian national oil companies in Angola and Nigeria.

Peace and security

This research focus explores the interlinked structural issues that give rise to peace and security challenges across Africa, including inadequate public service delivery and state security mechanisms, which have influenced instability and jihadist configurations in the Sahel, West Africa, Horn of Africa and northern Mozambique. Projects and outputs have focused on cross-border conflict, as well as the role of regional institutions and African Peace and Security Architecture (APSA) in peacebuilding and peacekeeping. Through convening country-specific dialogues, the Africa Programme seeks to develop baseline understandings of the structural causes of fragility and factors of risk and resilience in conflict-affected contexts.

The Africa Programme will continue to partner with African stakeholders and institutions to provide expert analysis and policy solutions that help to stimulate equitable economic growth, reduce poverty, promote peace and security and mitigate climate change.
