

Contributors

AUDREY ALEXANDER specializes in the radicalization of women and studies the role of digital communications technologies in terrorism. As a Research Fellow at the Program on Extremism at The George Washington University, she authored the report 'Cruel intentions: female jihadists in America' and published articles in Foreign Affairs, the Washington Post and Lawfare blog. In this role, she also maintains a database of nearly 3,000 pro-Islamic State social media accounts. Before joining the Program on Extremism, she worked at King's College London's International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and the Institute for Strategic Dialogue.

EMMA-LOUISE ANDERSON is a Lecturer in International Development at the University of Leeds. Her research focuses on global health, gender and African agency. She was recognized on the University of Leeds 'Roll of Honour' for women of outstanding achievement and contribution in their field. Her monograph, Gender, risk and HIV: navigating structural violence (2015), was runner-up for the International Studies Association (ISA) Global Health Section Book Prize (2016). She co-authored Dependent agency in the global health regime: local African responses to donor AIDS efforts (with Amy S. Patterson, 2016). She has also published in Third World Quarterly and the International Feminist Journal of Politics. She contributed to developing the Government of Malawi's National Gender and HIV Implementation Plan 2015–2020.

SKYLAR BROOKS is a PhD candidate in Global Governance at the Balsillie School of International Affairs, University of Waterloo. His current research examines the politics of reform in the sovereign debt restructuring regime since the 2008 global financial crisis. Previously, he was a Research Associate in the Global Economy program at the Centre for International Governance Innovation (CIGI).

JEFFREY M. CHWIEROTH is Professor of International Political Economy in the Department of International Relations at the London School of Economics (LSE). He is also a Research Associate of the ESRC-funded Systemic Risk Centre at LSE. He is the author of Capital ideas: the IMF and the rise of financial liberalization (2010). He has published numerous articles and book chapters on the political economy of international money and finance.

MATTHEW CLAPPERTON is an Analyst on the Central Analysis Team of IHS Jane's, specializing in aerospace, defence and security. He has previously worked at the Hudson Institute and as an Against Violent Extremism Network volunteer with the Institute of Strategic Dialogue.

Contributors

ALICE DE JONGE is a senior lecturer in law at Monash Business School, Monash University, Melbourne. She lectures in the post-graduate subjects International Law and Policy, and Comparative Business Law in Asia. She is the author of three books: Corporate governance and China's H-share market (2008); Transnational corporations and international law (2011) and The glass ceiling in Chinese and Indian boardrooms (2015), as well as various book chapters and journal articles.

PETER DOMBROWSKI is a professor of strategy in the Strategic and Operational Research Department at the Naval War College. His previous positions include chair of the Strategic Research Department, director of the Naval War College Press, editor of the Naval War College Review, co-editor of International Studies Quarterly, Associate Professor of Political Science at Iowa State University and defence analyst at ANSER, Inc. He has also been affiliated with research institutions including the East–West Center, The Brookings Institution, the Friedrich Ebert Foundation, and the Watson Institute for International Studies at Brown University, among others. He is the author of over 65 books, monographs, articles, book chapters and government reports.

ALI BURAK GÜVEN is Lecturer in International Relations and International Political Economy in the Department of Politics at Birkbeck, University of London, where he directs the MSc programme in Global Governance and Emerging Powers. His research interests include comparative and international political economy, international organizations and global governance, and the politics of development. His articles have appeared in journals including Development and Change, Development Policy Review, Global Governance, New Political Economy, and Studies in Comparative International Development. He is also the co-editor, with Richard Sandbrook, of Civilizing globalization: a survival guide (revised and expanded edition, 2014).

ERIC HELLEINER is Professor in the Department of Political Science and Balsillie School of International Affairs at the University of Waterloo. His most recent books include Forgotten foundations of Bretton Woods (2014), The status quo crisis: global financial governance after the 2008 meltdown (2014) and The Great Wall of money: power and politics in China's international monetary relations (co-edited with Jonathan Kirshner, 2014). He is also presently co-editor, also with Kirshner, of the book series Cornell studies in money.

NICK KADERBHAJ is a PhD student in the War Studies department at King's College London. Previously, while completing his MA, he worked as a full-time research fellow at the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation (ICSR), where he specialized in the radicalization and recruitment of western foreign fighters joining extremist groups in Syria and Iraq. He left ICSR in August 2016 as an Associate Fellow, and is concentrating on his PhD dissertation, which is investigating grand strategy, national identity and the left in early twentieth-century Britain. During his under- and post-graduate studies at King's he was awarded the Saki Ruth Dockrill Prize for best undergraduate dissertation and the Worshipful Company of Security Professionals Essay Prize.

Contributors

DAVID MARTIN JONES is Visiting Professor in the Department of War Studies, King's College London. He is author of many works on political theory and political development. His publications include Towards illiberal democracy in Pacific Asia (with Daniel A. Bell, David Brown and Kanishka Jayasuriya, 1995); Political development in Pacific Asia (1997); Conscience and allegiance in seventeenth century England (1999); The image of China in western social and political thought (2001); Sacred violence: political religion in a secular age (with M. L. R. Smith, 2014); The political impossibility of modern counterinsurgency: strategic problems, puzzles and paradoxes (with M. L. R. Smith, 2015).

ALEXANDER MELEAGROU-HITCHENS is the Research Director of the Program on Extremism at The George Washington University. Previously, he was the Head of Research at the International Centre for the Study of Radicalisation and a lecturer on terrorism and radicalization in the War Studies Department at King's College London. He has researched and conducted fieldwork on jihadist groups in the United States, United Kingdom, East Africa and Iraq. He is currently working on a new book on the Yemeni-American jihadist ideologue Anwar al-Awlaki (forthcoming, 2017). He has also written numerous articles on the topics of terrorism and radicalization, and his work has appeared in various outlets, including The Wall Street Journal, BBC, CNN, Foreign Policy and Foreign Affairs.

AMY S. PATTERSON is Carl Biehl Professor of International Affairs at the University of the South, Tennessee. She is author of Africa and global health governance: domestic politics and international structures (forthcoming), The church and AIDS in Africa: the politics of ambiguity (2011), and The politics of AIDS in Africa (2006). She is also editor of The African state and the AIDS crisis (2005) and co-editor of The politics and anti-politics of social movements: religion and AIDS in Africa (with Marian Burchardt and Louise Mubanda Rasmussen, 2016). She has published in numerous African studies and global health journals. She co-authored Dependent agency in the global health regime: local African responses to donor AIDS efforts (with Emma-Louise Anderson, 2016).

SIMON REICH is a professor in the Division of Global Affairs and Department of Political Science at Rutgers, Newark. He previously served as Director of Research and Analysis at Chatham House, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, and as the inaugural director of the Ford Institute for Human Security at the University of Pittsburgh. He is author, co-author and editor of 10 books and over 50 articles or book chapters. His most recent book is Good-bye hegemony! Power and influence in the global system (with Richard Ned Lebow, 2014). His work has been translated into Chinese, Dutch, German and Japanese. He has received numerous awards including an International Affairs Fellowship from the Council on Foreign Relations.

JAMES SCOTT is Lecturer in International Political Economy in the Department of Political Economy at King's College London. He works primarily on trade governance, particularly with regard to developing countries in the World Trade Organization. He is co-editor of Expert knowledge in global trade (2015) and Trade, poverty, development: getting beyond the WTO's Doha deadlock (2013) and has published extensively on the topics of trade, global governance and development.

Contributors

M. L. R. SMITH is Professor of Strategic Theory and Head of the Department of War Studies, King's College London. His publications include: Fighting for Ireland? The military strategy of the Irish republican movement (1995 and 1997); The strategy of terrorism: how it works, and why it fails (with Peter R. Neumann, 2008); Sacred violence: political religion in a secular age (with David Martin Jones, 2014); The political impossibility of modern counterinsurgency: strategic problems, puzzles and paradoxes (with David Martin Jones, 2015).

DOUG STOKES is Professor of International Security and Director of the Centre for Advanced International Studies at the University of Exeter. He is a Senior Associate Fellow at the Royal United Services Institute. His new book, co-authored with Kit Waterman, What good is the stick? American military primacy and the global economy is due to be published in 2019.

ANDREW WALTER is Professor of International Relations in the School of Social and Political Sciences, University of Melbourne. He has published numerous articles on the political economy of international money and finance and their governance among and within countries. His books include Governing finance: East Asia's adoption of international standards (2008), Analyzing the global political economy (2009), China, the United States, and global order (with Rosemary Foot, 2011), East Asian capitalism (ed. with Xiaoke Zhang, 2012), and Global financial governance confronts the rising powers (ed. with C. R. Henning, 2016). His current research projects include the politics of financial crises and emerging countries in global economic governance.

KIT WATERMAN is Senior Research Fellow at the Centre for Advanced International Studies and a PhD candidate at the University of Exeter. He is the co-author, with Doug Stokes, of What good is the stick? American military primacy and the global economy (forthcoming, 2019).

RORDEN WILKINSON is Professor of Global Political Economy and a Fellow of the UK Trade Policy Observatory at the University of Sussex. He teaches and researches in the areas of international trade, global development, international organization and global governance. His most recent books include: What's the point of International Relations? (2017), What's wrong with the WTO and how to fix it (2014) and International organization and global governance (2014, second edition 2018). He co-edits the Global Institutions series for Routledge and currently serves as a vice president of the International Studies Association.